

Who is Pam Burrows?

Pam Burrows has been speaking professionally for over 25 years in the public sector, third sector and in the commercial world. After her early career in local authority childcare, Pam began designing and delivering in house courses for staff, managers and leaders. Stepping into the commercial sector for a few years she ran workshops in high value sales and negotiations to blue chip companies. Delivering globally, she eventually got homesick and now mostly works in the UK, focussing on the value of boosting individuals' confidence, energy and positivity to bring value to their wellbeing, performance and to the organisation.

Customers tend to invite Pam back again and again, seeing the difference she can make to people who care about the work they do. It's those people who can easily get burnt out in whilst striving to do a good job in a difficult situation. She energises, encourages and empowers people to realise just how precious and amazing they are.

She is particularly passionate about working with women to power up their public speaking skills and to turbo boost their success.

In 2015 Pam won a European OSHA award with Nottingham City Homes for reducing stress in the workplace.

She is a Fellow of the Professional Speaking Association.

Pam is a qualified Nursery Nurse, Social Worker and Master Practitioner in Neurolinguistic Programming (NLP). She appears regularly on TV and BBC Radio and has produced 2 short films on social issues.
